We're on a Mission

Although most people think we're losing our forests, forestland is increasing. But as forests mature, the young forests are in significant decline.

The cover and food found in young forests provide the essential habitat for grouse, woodcock, deer, rabbits and numerous species of migratory song birds.

For over 60 years, the Ruffed Grouse Society has created healthy young forest habitat. RGS Forest Conservation Directors work with landowners and government agencies to develop habitat with selective cutting, planting, and other practices.
